Outward LOOKING

by Chris Hewett, The Independent

Gloucester and Europe: on the face of it, neither is a part of the other. Five years ago, at the start of the 1997-98 campaign, the feared and ferocious denizens of Kingsholm had 16 forwards on the first-team books, no fewer than 11 of whom – Windo, Deacon, Greening, Fortey, Cornwell, Fidler, Sims, Devereux, Glanville, Carter and Stanley – were born in the city. Of the remaining quintet, two were from other parts of the West Country. Only Neil

McCarthy (born in Slough), the New Zealander, Andrew Gibbs and a Midlands prop intriguingly named Warwick Bullock were “foreigners” – that is to say, from any part of the world not intimately familiar with rough cider and the “ooo-arr” school of elocution.

Back then, the jokes about Gloucester’s insularity could have filled one of Barry Cryer’s notebooks. Rumour had it that the Cherry and White management advised players to bring their passports for an away trip to Cheltenham, and no less a figure than Gareth Chilcott, not everyone's image of a Greek god, once scored a try in the Forest of Dean and celebrated with the remark: "Take that, you six-toed buggers."

Then came Philippe Saint-André, as quintessentially French as Mike Burton was quintessentially Longlevens. The brilliant Tricolore wing introduced Gloucester to the rest of the planet by recruiting players from every corner of his homeland...indeed, from every corner of the rugby-playing world. Had it not been for Saint-André, it is reasonable to suggest that Olivier Azam, Ludovic Mercier, Patrice Collazo, Pierre Caillet, Dimitri Yachvili, Diego Albanese and Koli Sewabu would not have surfaced at Castle Grim in a squillion years – and, it is equally fair to surmise, Gloucester would not have embraced European competition as enthusiastically as they have.

In that 97-98 season, they reached the last eight of the European Shield. Although they found themselves on the prickly end of a Stade Français special in Paris

Philippe Saint-André in action

—Vincent Moscato's team caned them 53-22 – their appetite had been whetted. Three years later, they made a tremendous fist of their first taste of high-life among the Heineken Cup elite by beating Llanelli home and away to win their group, seeing off Cardiff in a one-sided quarter-final and then pushing Leicester, the eventual winners, every millimetre of the way in a wonderful semi-final at Vicarage Road.

Saint-André, above the petty rivalries of purely domestic competition, established European rugby as his top priority: only this season, he chose to field a below-strength side in a Powergen Cup quarter-final at London Irish because he considered Gloucester's PARKER PEN SHIELD knock-out tie with Ebbw Vale five days later to be immeasurably more important. Saint-André is no longer at Kingsholm, however; frustrated at his failure to negotiate an extension to his contract, he accepted an offer from Bourgoin and cleared his desk. Will Gloucester continue to buy into the European ideal, or will they revert to time-honoured type?

Happily, Euro-enthusiasm is still in the air in the old cathedral city. Nigel Melville, Saint-André's successor, guided Wasps through four Heineken Cup campaigns, twice reaching the last eight, and is well versed in the cross-border language now in vogue at the cutting edge of the northern hemisphere club game.

have not enjoyed the best of months at Premiership level, suffering some major-league hidings on the road at Wasps and Northampton, but there is more than a suggestion of their keeping some powder dry for today's essential business with Sale.

Melville is now fully hands-on at Kingsholm – for contractual reasons, his input prior to the match at Wasps two and a half weeks ago was restricted – and the renowned hard-heads in

by Phil Vickery, Gloucester Captain

Today we line-up in the semi-final of the PARKER PEN SHIELD. After recent results this game and this competition has become doubly important for us and everyone involved with Gloucester Rugby Club.

Any cup competition throws up a different focus, a different challenge and every player likes to be involved in this type of competition. Also, we have said all season that this was a competition that we wanted to win. We have worked hard up until now to get ourselves in this position and today is a chance for us to go one step further than we managed last year and reach the final.

Of course, we will take nothing for granted today. Sale are a fantastic team with some world class players in their squad. They have the ability to put any team under pressure and I'm sure that they will be out for revenge after the two defeats they have suffered against us already this season.

I said when we played Sale at Kingsholm last time out that whatever happened in the Premiership fixtures it would have little relevance in today's game. We won both encounters and so we must take some confidence into today's game. It is a different pressure from the League programme and will give the players a chance to focus on one game and try to get some confidence and pride back into our game.

There is nothing that would please this squad, myself included, more than to bring a trophy home to Kingsholm. For the fans that have supported us so well not just this season but throughout, but also for the players and everyone involved with the club.

We have all worked very hard to get ourselves into this position, but we know the job is not yet finished. To get to the final we must be on top of our game today and then to win the competition, as we have set out to do since August, we must work even harder.

We will take today's game as it comes but I am confident that if we play as well as we can we can win.
