The game started against a stiff wind — so stiff, in fact, that the only way to kick the ball up the field was to run behind and push it. First try it left the ground altogether.

The ball didn’t seem to like this, and just after the Albion scored their first goal, it left the ground altogether.

By “Teek.”

The moral of this seems to be that you can accomplish any mortal thing if you really put your back into the job. And now to bed. Good night, everybody.